

COLONY

vol 1 issue 1

thegorillapress

Editors' note,

We are claiming stake to our portion of the Internet. This excellent collection of poetry wrote its charter, set sail, and settled in thoughts for the gorilla press's inaugural issue, Colony. Crafted from a word, built in a scale of time, and founded in the next few pages.

Thank you to all our contributors, and Thanks for reading,

thegorillapress

- | | |
|------------------------|---------------------|
| [1] Vessel | - Coert Ambrosino | | [3] Bones | - Melissa West | | [5] Family Settlement | - Josh Healey | | [7] Back to the Colony | - Rob Gray |
| [9] A New Place | - Rebecca Jablonsky |

Use 'Next Page' and 'Previous Page' to navigate this Journal

Use 'Next Page' and 'Previous Page to navigate' this Journal

Vessel

beyond the edge of the map a diasporic settling down at the bottom of a glass. a trade-wind brew of colliding particles becomes syncopated swirl atop the navigator's table. sweat rolls off the rim in wavelike rhythm, soaking into parchment like blood into sand.

Brand

beyond the edge of the water a staff is planted into earthskin deep enough for forever. the faces are certain as steel, regal facades unwavering, letting the flag make the move. underground the threads tessellate outward into thoughts and soil, rugged terrain becoming familiar. the straining roots snap in firelike rhythm, put into proper places like pins into butterfly stomachs.

Convert

beyond the edge of memory the scattered pieces come together recollecting, moving on. past the land divided, past divided people landed, past tradition torn tearful, past pyramids tiered and crumbling, there are fingers moving like footwork, needlepoints dancing string into cloth. there are people swirling like current, in drumlike rhythm, forced forward into motion like a knife into a back.

Coert Ambrosino is an accomplished dreamer and an aspiring teacher and writer from Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Bones

the cornfields are still there, buried below the concrete soil and they cry out sometimes, taking the form of a subway jazz musician or an old man meditating at the marble fountain.

Marrow/Memory

In my most recent incarnation, I am a baby bird Silken wings that one day will take me across the river sound.

I have read of the ancient bodies That foam across the river's mouth, I died there once.

The summer will come soon
And the black berries will grow from the green leaved trees.

And this nature is beautiful And we sit on the rocks that were once thawed From the great ages of ice.

How unnamed is this land!

There was a time when I used to watch Him, the nails cutting wood, Repetitious and steady,
A low drumbeat that held the house up tall.

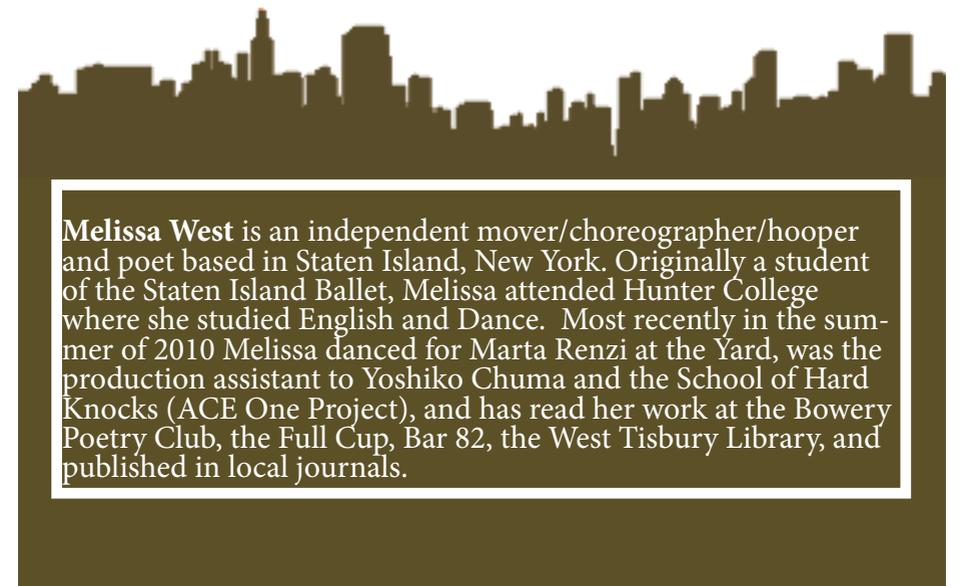

That was magic.

I wish my father would build things again,
The way he did when we were children.

This house could never be a colony.
We'd starve before the first winter passed.

--

When the bones in the earth are crying, I lay upon them and cry, too.

[5] Family Settlement

- Josh Healey

COLONY

Hannah's dad,
my cousin's father, calls the place where he lives a suburb just outside of Jerusalem

I ask her what she calls it

settlement village occupied territory?

euphemisms and borders erase and rearrange lines of blood

a name gives life sound and breath to newborn flesh but it can kill too Israel does both

Hannah does not know silence she is song and hand-raised and blonde like America

but her hair curls thick like America, she is contradiction she is blue eyes big nose, rough lips she is quick tears and harsh tongue she will tell you when you fuck up

Israel, are you listening? your daughter,
my cousin,
grew up in my dining room every Friday night she sang over candle and wine and bread the only Goldman who could carry a tune can you hear her prayer?

thegorillapress.com

[6] Family Settlement

- Josh Healey

COLONY

her parents divided across ocean America and Israel she loves you both loves your jazz and your falafel your Broadway and your kibbutz the idealism of your youth she wishes you still had it that you could be caring partners honest enough to ask who has the right of naming?

what mother baptized this child Tel Aviv and that one Ramallah?

my aunt's daughter, Channah, meaning favored one, walks Northwest DC unafraid of stray bullets or police badges but two school vacations ago she was with her father when Israel evacuated Gaza she feared rockets raining down on his desert town, leaving puddles of silent bodies amongst the sand

I ask her,
What do you call this land?

Hannah looks up with eyes blue like the rain like the Potomac and the Galilee like her half-brothers Yochai, Bar, and Nehorai she tells me

I call it the place where my family lives.

thegorillapress.com

Josh Healey is an innovative writer, community organizer, arts educator, and comedic powerhouse whose work stirs your political imagination and attacks your funny bone without mercy. Writing and fighting in a mashed-up combination of Amiri Baraka, Naomi Klein, and Dave Chappelle, he is the author of Hammertime: Poems and Possibilities (OMAI/First Wave Press).

[7] Back to the Colony

COLONY

I.
The day after She dies is, frankly, the saddest fucking day in a long time even for those of us who didn't like her much and especially for her husband who decides to come to work instead of stay alone at home where there is no escape.

Nobody can look at him in the eye, he is such a wreck. He drinks Mountain Dew and pretends to read.

Knowing full well that he can't read we offer our condolences with one armed hugs. There is work to be done.

II.
The funeral is Catholic.
The stained glass saints are crying.
The dogs are barking.
Police sirens are singing.

Testimonials offer glorified memories where perhaps shame would be more honest, but what for?

- Rob Gray

[8] Back to the Colony

thegorillapress.com

For example, nobody mentions fried chicken or how damn rude she could be at times.

They remember her belly laugh and stubborn goodness.
The voice of the priest floats out the front door and eventually we all follow his words back to our cars and back to the places where there is still work to be done.

- Rob Gray

COLONY

thegorillapress.com

Rob Gray is a friendly English man who lives and works in Portland, OR. [www.sillyrobchildish.com]

I know a street that is empty.
Where your favorite films will be projected onto the sides of buildings and you can brew your own coffee in an abandoned Starbucks until everything runs out.
And there is no more coffee or art or even squirrels and the same scenes play over again: A rise, a fall, contemplation—a baffled laughter at all that has been lost.
And the whole neighborhood will try to heal its own illness and forget its own past and I will sit in the sun dreaming of babies sipping my damn coffee watching you work so hard to start again.

Rebecca Jablonsky earned a Master's degree in something important at NYU. She dances, makes music, and writes poetry to keep herself from doing other things that really aren't that fun to do.

thegorillapress.com

Editors

Chris Jennings

Dan Lau

M a r i a m a L o c k i n g t o n

Jason Schenheit

Lisa Marie
S c h n a u b e l t

Layout Editor

Jason Schenheit

